

Aims and Scope

The Journal of World Buddhist Cultures (JWBC) is a peer-reviewed journal aimed at developing and disseminating broad knowledge related to Buddhism. It also attempts to encourage international intellectual exchange seeking solutions to the various problems of people living in the unpredictable and uncertain modern world by actively engaging with Buddhist studies. The JWBC defines Buddhist studies broadly, also including philosophy, literature, history, politics, economics, anthropology, sociology, criminology, and area studies related to Buddhism one way or another.

The editorial team encourages not only the submission of unpublished original manuscripts but also articles from panels, workshops, and conferences for joint publication in such styles as forums and roundtables. It also includes scholarly articles, book reviews, records of lectures organized by the Research Center for World Buddhist Cultures (RCWBC), and a wide variety of translational works. The editorial team specifically encourages the submission of papers written in English, although papers in Japanese can also be submitted.

All scholarly articles in the JWBC undergo double-blind peer review, typically by two to three reviewers who are prominent scholars on the subject. The editors maintain final discretion over the publication of all content.

The JWBC is edited by the RCWBC of Ryukoku University, Kyoto, Japan.
